Foundling Hospital Textile Swatches & Tokens

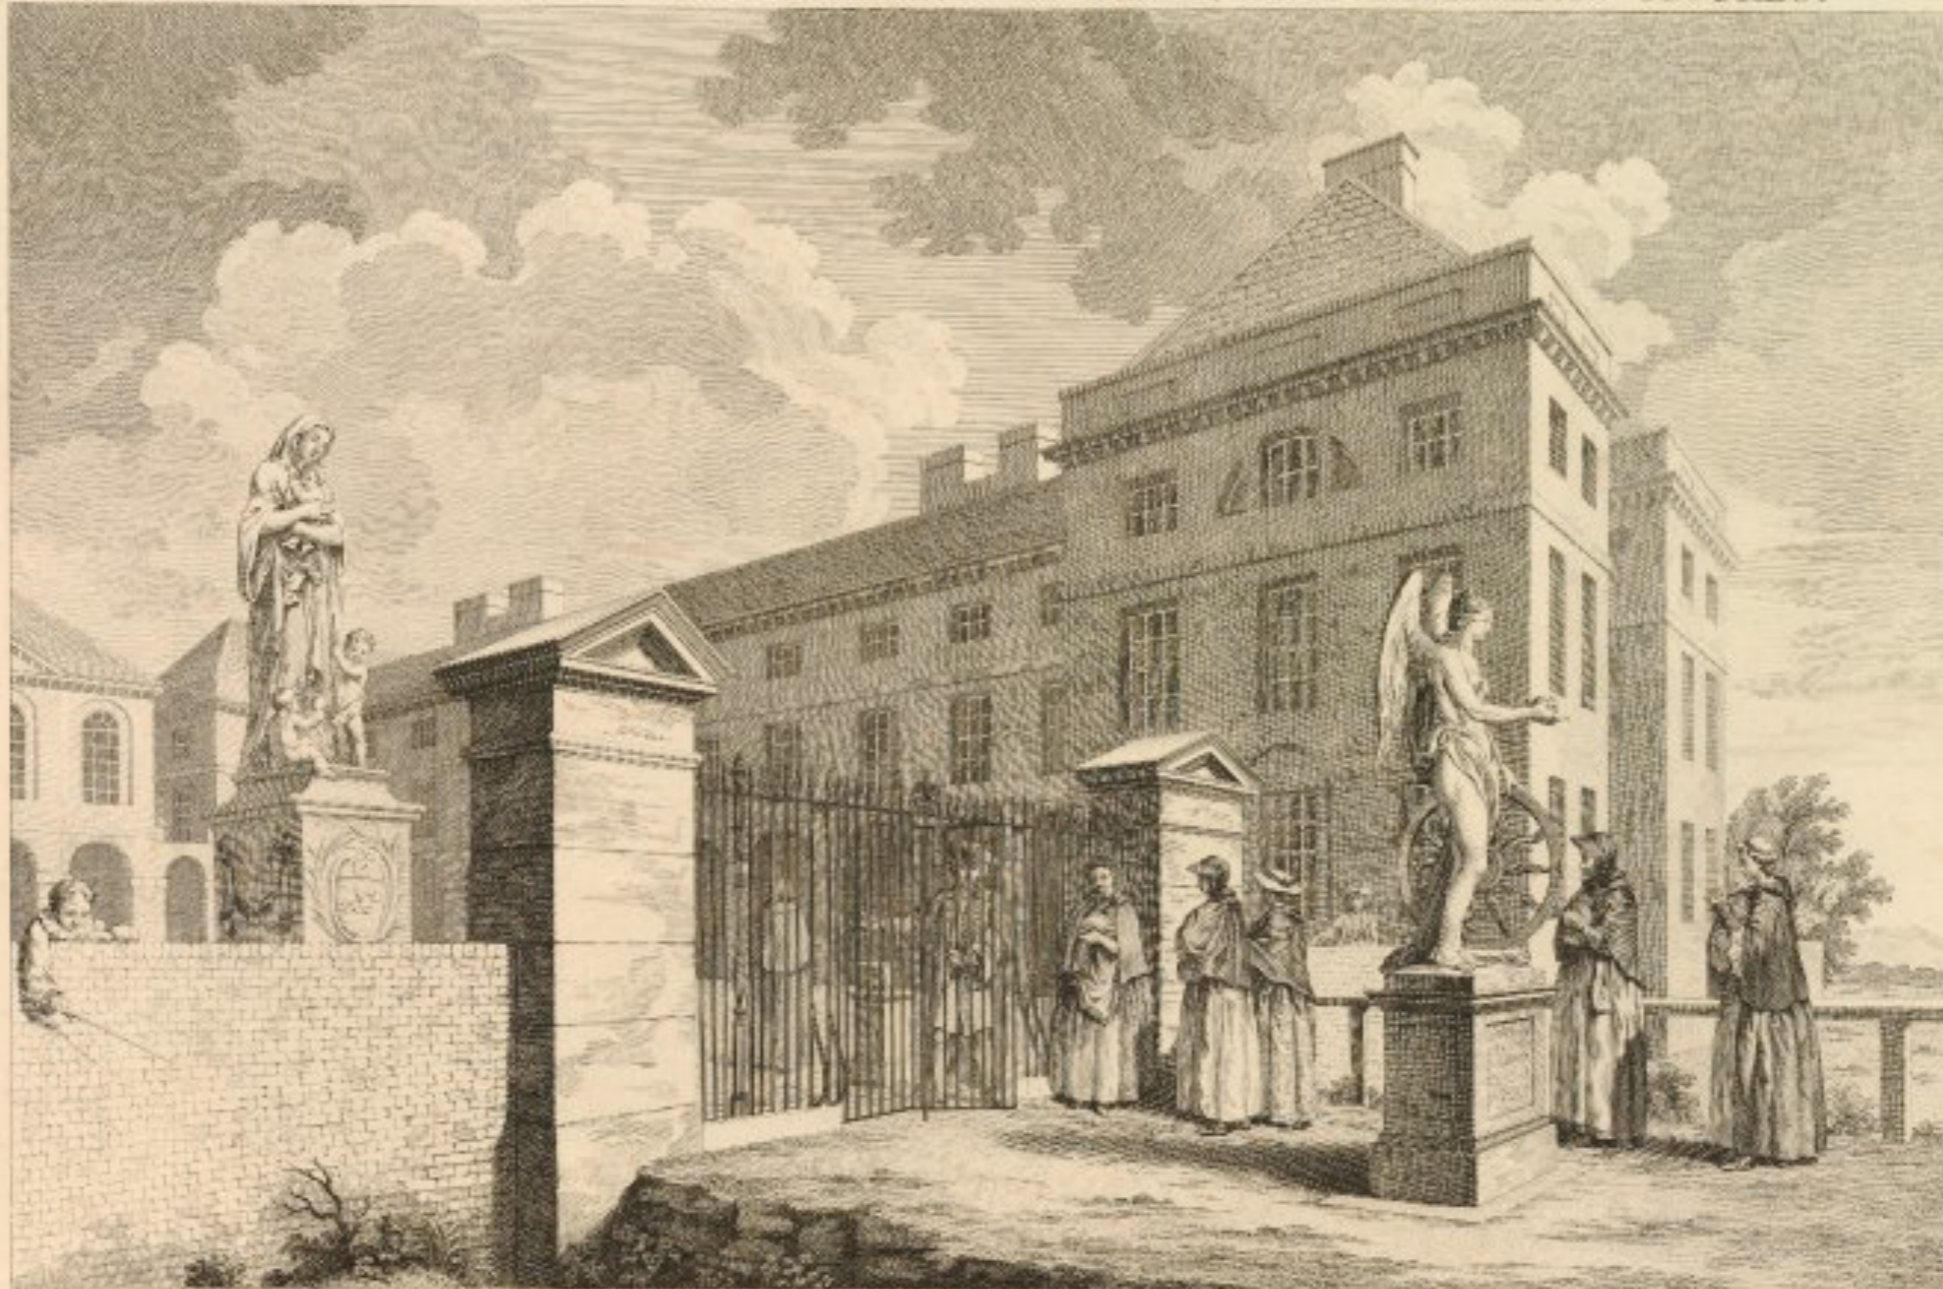

The Foundling Hospital

When a destitute woman could no longer care for her child in 18th century London, she could deliver that child to the Foundling Hospital.

In order to reunite the child with the mother should she ever return, a small token or swatch of cloth was left with the Hospital as a means of identification.

A PERSPECTIVE VIEW OF THE FOUNDLING HOSPITAL, WITH EMBLEMATIC FIGURES.

*Thro' various Wilds and Scenes by Fortune tost Few share her Smiles, whilst Multitudes are lost:
 All own her Power, the Lowly and the Great,
 But to conduct the slighted Orphans Fate?
 To his Grace John Duke of Bedford; this Plate is humbly Inscribed by his Graces most Dutiful and Obedient Servant Margaret Granville.*

Pilton July 26 1778

First Sir, we now make bold to trouble you with these few lines, first past, distressed young girls bound out of your Hospital apprentices to Benj Busby Son of Chiddle in the County of Chester Cotton Spinners. But since taken of by him upwards of three Hundred miles from that place, and am now in a parish called Pilton nigh Barnstable in the County of Devon, and Mr. Bayon Joyn'd in Partnership with Mr. Bowering number of partners of others and others in Corn, and have built a large house in Pilton for Carruag, or Cotton spinning, and now there is a great difference between Mr. Bayon & his partners, that he is gone of from the place we know not where, and now we are by his partners turn'd to Pilton parish and are now in the first House almost quite out So we now beg your kind favours to instruct us what we are to do in our maintenance, as we have no friends to apply to but you, so we hope you'll give your self the trouble to write to us, & so Direct to Mr. Mr. Richard's near Dept to the King of Wells in Pilton nigh Barnstable Devon and we shall be safe in having the letter, we now wish our Dutys to all the good Governours of the Place
